CABMAN SAYS YOUNG WAS IN HURRY TO MEET HIS WIFE AT THE PIER.

Strong Point for the Prosecution in Michaels Story that the Last Order Bookmaker Gave Was to Hasten to the Ship in Which He Was to Sail

When the ghastly figure of a skeleton was carried into Justice Vernon M. Davis's Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court this afternoon and placed almost directly in front of Nan Patterson, the pretty young actress on trial for the murder of Caesar Young, she shrank back in her seat with a shudder of horror and nervously gripped her father's shoulder.

A few moments before she had been visibly affected when pieces of skin taken from the fingers of the dead bookmaker and pastd on thin slabs of glass had been held up before her. For a brief interval she was apparently on the verge of collapse and called for a glass of water to

Then her amazing reserve of nerve force came to her aid and she slowly recovered her composure. When court adjourned for the day, with Coroner's Physician O'Hanlon on the stand, she was again sitting calm and rigid with her eyes fixed on the witness.

MAY HAVE AN EYE-WITNESS.

That the lawyers who are battling for the lie of Miss Patterson atend to put forward the testimony of eye-witnesses in her defense was shown to-day by the manner of Abraham Levy's cross-examinaton of the State's

In his questioning of Frederick Michaels, the cabman, who drove Young and Miss Patterson on the fatal ride, he brought out with peculiar force that a red-haired man was standing near the hansom when the report of the revolver was heard. Michaels had seen a brown-haired man. This red or brown haired man is the defendant's principal eye-witnessin fact, the only actual witness to the tragedy on whom the counsel for the actress place any reliance.

The acknowledgment of Michaels that he saw the man is construed Odds-On Favorite in the Stake Dowling Ordinance Forbidding Mary Cortes Thought Herself Montana Balloon Meteor Drifts by Mr. Levy and his associates as affording a solid groundwork for the dewith Wind at Good Height and fense, and without which the evidence of their alleged eye-witnesses would be of little value. His statement was contradicted later by William Stemm, jr., who rode on the steps of the cab to the hospital. Stemm said there was no other person near at the time of the shooting.

POINT FOR THE PROSECUTION.

But if Michaels gave hope and comfort to the defense he made also a No. 115 Hudson street, Hoboken, drank ship Meteor, with Thomas Benbow, the strong witness for the prosecution. He told in his direct testimony of the eagerness of Caesar Young to get to the White Star line pier, where Mrs. course at the World's Fair.
